The National Privacy Commission in its five pillars of compliance expects the Personal Information Controllers (all those who set the policies), Processors (all those who collect, process and file information) and the Data Protection Officer to provide a system and create the manual that document the agreed data privacy protocol within the organization to implement the set rules and regulation in the processing of personal data and in securing personal information.

These two half-day online training sessions will provide participants with the whole-of-the-enterprise approach and methodology to compose the mandated Privacy Management Manual based on the National Privacy Commission’s practice standards.

It will also include topics on how to plan, design, acquire, build and operate a Security Operation Center and provide a security incident management framework to help your organization hurdle the challenges of data breach, compliance and business continuity.
